MODERN MARTYRDOM.

Facts of Awful Massacres Being Gathered.

"GREAT POWERS" ARE SILENT

They Were Fully Aware of the Awful Slaughters Going on In Armenia, but Not One Raised a Finger to Prevent It.

New York, June 1.—The horrible outrages committed against Christians in Armenia by the Mohammedans are being gathered in detail and given to the public. The facts are being gathered from blue books, consular reports and testimony of eye witnesses who were deserted by "the great powers" and left defenseless to be imprisoned, tortured and put to death by every devilish device which demons incarnate could contrive, while the "Christian" nations looked on in criminal acquiescence, reading the bloodiest, blackest record that has ever blotted the pages of human history, in guilty silence, when the guns on the greatest armaments the world has ever seen should be thundering up to the very throne of the Eternal against these worse than hellish horrors which no mortal mind could begin to imagine in all their awful blending of tears and blood and agony and death with which it is written by bloody sword and bayonet, dripping dagger and gory spear, deadly ball and cruel blows, torments and tortures too terrible to tell, crimes that boil the blood to dream of, wrongs that wring the heart to think of, horrors that sicken the soul to hear of, deeds no decent tongue could speak of, by demons who disgrace our race, and desecrate our age, and damn us if indifferent. Truly, no pencil could picture, no pen could depict, no tongue could tell the terrible details of these awful tragedies of modern martyrdom.

PENNSYLVANIA TRAGEDY.

Rifleman Prostrated Over the Accidental Killing of His Friend.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., June 1.—A terrible tragedy occurred at the rifle range of the Ninth regiment, National Guard of Pennsylvania, at Parsons, Pa. The members of Company E were at practice and Obediah Rhodes, the fifth sergeant of the company, was looking after the targets. He gave the signal to fire and then raised his head above the danger line. The large crowd present was horrified to see a bullet from the rifle of John R. Hipple strike him in the head, killing him instantly. Hipple is prostrated over the affair, as he and Rhodes were fast friends. The latter was 26 years old and a well-known resident of Parsons.

THE PRESIDENT'S CUBAN POLICY.

Senator Morgan Is Not Entirely Satisfied With It.

Washington, June 1.—Senator Morgan of the senate committee on foreign relations and author of the joint resolution recognizing the existence of a state of war in Cuba and declaring the neutrality of the United States, was asked concerning the probability of securing action upon the resolution before adjournment, and in reply said:

"Unless the house should act upon Mr. Hyde's resolution, which is identical with the resolution offered by me in the senate that is now held up in the committee on foreign relations, congress will probably disperse before any further action is possible. That responsibility will doubtless hasten the disposition of some senators. The disposition of the majority of the senate committee is to devolve upon the president responsibility that he is evidently eager to assume. Congress has practically ceased to be a factor in the government except in the case of a veto, when the constitution permits it to act finally by a two-thirds vote. Even this function is denied when it is applied to our foreign political relations.

"For a government with three co-ordinate departments of which we boast, we are making a strange and rapid movement toward re-establishing the royal prerogative in the hands of our executive as an uncontrollable power. If any British constitutional power was destroyed in America by the revolution of 1776, it was the prerogative of the crown. If the president, acting alone, can substitute the entire body of the laws of war for the laws of peace, which now govern our relations with Cuba, and if he can make this total revolution of our legal status as citizens and as a nation binding upon us by his proclamation, it is in vain that we abolished the royal prerogative in our federal constitution.

"If the president, without the concurrence of congress, should proclaim that war existed in Cuba and that the United States assumes the attitude of a neutral power toward the recognized belligerents under the laws of nations, he would usurp a power of the most dangerous character. In the moment of their enthusiasm for a decree that would be so just and so humane, the people would forgive the usurpation, but the shock it would give to our free government would lead in time to great disaster.

"In the present state of political agitation in the country it is dangerously apparent that a declaration of war with Spain or a declaration of the existence of a state of war in Cuba made on the sole authority of the president, would create a fever of excitement in the country that would remove all other questions now under anxious discussion from the minds of the people and would control the presidential election near at hand.

"I am firmly convinced that the president will not venture on so dangerous a course, when congress disperses leaving our relations in this connection in their present equivocal situation. Spain will be at liberty, so far as our government is concerned, to pursue its accustomed course of summary destruction of the rights of property and the lives of our people.

"War exists in Cuba and the whole world knows it. Spain admits its existence in every act but denies it on paper and in a diplomatic way. Our government and people are required to indorse this falsehood and to admit that peace prevails in that island. They punish our people for treason, insurrection and piracy with the death penalty because they are charged with disturbing the peace and breaking the laws that are intended to preserve the peace in Cuba, while peace does not exist in the island.

"To make the case still more obnoxious to reason and public justice, Spain violates her treaties with the United States by forcing our citizens to trial for these offenses before military tribunals, organized to convict and deprive them of defense by counsel and of the right to summon witnesses in their behalf in this alleged time of peace. If the government of the United States should declare that a state of war exists in Cuba, it would use the only means that is legally possible to prevent Spain from this insulting conduct, unless we declare war and fight it out.

"After the almost unanimous declaration of both houses of congress that belligerent rights should be accorded to Cuba and that war exists there, if we disperse without giving relief to our people from this situation, we can find no excuse for abandoning them to this dreadful fate except that we are ready to abdicate our power in favor of the supposed power or wishes of the president. The president's powers are not increased by our refusal to exercise powers that rightfully belong to congress alone or jointly to both departments of the government. So far as I am concerned this will not be done through any want of effort on my part.

"For more than seven weeks the president has known the will of congress, which expresses, constitutionally, the will of the people. If that declaration is not sufficient to give our people security against Spanish barbarity in violation of our treaties, or to impress the president with its solemnity, we should not and can not in justice to ourselves omit to present the same facts and convictions to the president in a definite form of action that he can not refuse to consider.

"Neither Spain nor the president, with the armies and navies of both countries and the aid of the civil power given the president under our laws; with the terror of Spanish cruelty, or the aid of our police and the Spanish police and Pinkertons in our ports, have been able to prevent the carrying of men and munitions of war from the United States to Cuba. This effort has been prosecuted with a faithfulness and vigilance worthy of a better cause.

POLICE COURT.

Crap Shooters Before Mayor Baxter Again.

NO WORK HOUSE SENTENCES.

Wm. Guinan Receives His Sentence—The Mayor Offers a Reward—Other Cases Disposed of by His Honor.

In keeping with the splended system of police service that was adopted under the new chief of police when the new patrolmen assumed their duties, last night, Mayor Baxter held a formal session of police court at his office in the city building at ten o'clock this morning. Several cases were disposed of, and while Dr. Baxter sentenced no one to a term in the Dayton workhouse, at an expense of $50 or $100 to the county, it is certain that the persons who were arraigned before him felt as deeply humiliated as if a sentence of sixty days and a fine of $25 each had been imposed upon them. They were greatly relieved when allowed to depart from the mayor's court room and none of them are anxious to appear again before Mayor Baxter on any charge.

Miles Collins, Ike Boone, Cliff Shaffer and John Towsey were the first disposed of. The former was charged with permitting gambling in his place of business, and the other three with crap shooting. They were fined $5 each, and the advice they received was worth more than that to each, if they choose to profit by it.

Fred Broeschoss, who poses as the husband of Min Dwyer, a Tanner street woman, was the next victim. He was arrested for being drunk and disorderly and for beating the woman he calls his wife, and the lecture that Dr. Baxter gave him was more severe than he could have imagined. The mayor informed him that the chief had in his desk a rogue's record, and that his name was in it with a star in front of it, he being classed as the star rogue of the city. Broeschess looked as though he wished that he was in Germany, his native land, before Mayor Baxter ceased his lecture. He was finally dismissed.

Wm Guinan, who was carried into the city prison Friday night in a state of beastly intoxication, was the next victim. He has frequently been arrested during the last few weeks and expected to get a term at Dayton, and when the mayor commenced on him he doubtless wished he would say "six months" and end it. His sentence, however, differed from what he expected. He was placed under charge of Janitor Vermillion, of the city building, and is to work about the building until such a time as the mayor may consider him sufficiently sober, then be punished. The mayor said he would keep a standing offer of $50 reward for evidence that will convict any person in the city of selling beer or whiskey hereafter, to Guinan.

Finley Vermillion, Cliff Roush and Cleo Miller, who were arrested Saturday night for disorderly conduct, were dismissed.

Con Hershberg and Ote Wilson were the last pair arraigned. They were charged with having been drunk and disorderly, recently, and were also dismissed with a severe reprimand.

TERRIBLE DISASTER.

Over Two Thousand People Trampled to Death at Moscow.

Moscow, June 1.—At the festival given to the peasants here Saturday about 500,000 persons were present and over 2,000 people were trampled to death.

Everywhere in the city excited groups of people discussed the disaster, the significant proportions of which all have at last come to realize. The streets presented some saddening contrasts to coronation week. Every few yards men were carrying coffins on their shoulders or across their knees in drosohkies.

The police and a force of soldiers with fixed bayonets keep order at the cemetery, where an unending stream of people passed, most of whom were distracted searchers after missing ones dear to them, but many of whom were the idle and morbidly curious.

There were most affecting scenes, wailing relatives and priests praying here and there beside the dead ranged upon the ground, surrounded by still larger numbers of the unidentified dead. Most of these poor remains of humanity had only a sheet for a covering to the mutilated and terribly disfigured bodies.

Some were in rough coffins, left half open to enable friends to identify them. People came upon the ground looking for missing ones, only to find other relatives engaged in dressing the bodies of the lost, while others were sitting sobbing and apparently helpless beside their dead.

The funerals commenced at 2 o'clock in the afternoon amid most demonstrative scenes of grief.

COULD TAKE HAVANA

BUT EXPERTS SAY IT WOULD BE MORE THAN CHILD'S PLAY.

What Would Occur Should War Break Out With Spain—Navy Alone Would Not Suffice—Opinion of an Engineer Who Has Visited Havana.

The consensus of opinion is that one of the first moves on the part of the United States in the event of the breaking out of hostilities against Spain would be upon Havana. There have been divers opinions expressed as to the success that an expedition against that city would meet with. Some of the more enthusiastic of the younger officers have taken it for granted that the capture of this fortified place would be mere child's play; that a couple of our big fighting ships would speedily raise the stars and stripes over Morro castle. Expert opinion, however, regards the task of capturing Havana as a more serious one.

Three or four years ago two officers of the United States engineer corps visited Havana and examined all the fortifications of the harbor and of the city. These two gentlemen are probably more thoroughly qualified to speak about the defenses of Havana than any others in the United States. One of them said to the correspondent:

"Havana can be taken by the United States forces, but not by a naval expedition alone. It would require an army in conjunction with our ships to capture the town and silence the guns of its batteries. The entrance to Havana harbor is narrow. On the right side lies the city, and on the left are its most important defenses. No hostile war vessels could enter that harbor and live unless the Spanish batteries on the left side were first silenced, for not only would they be subjected to the broadside fire from the forts, but the entrance could be easily guarded by means of movable torpedoes.

"The first fort that commands the entrance to the harbor is Morro castle. But this is an antiquated structure, with thin walls and a poor equipment of guns, and it would be a very easy matter to destroy it. As a fortification Morro castle is not worth consideration. But just beyond Morro and farther inside the harbor, yet fully commanding the entrance, is the Cabana fortress. This is a very strong position. It is as large as Fort Monroe and has recently been fully equipped with the most modern guns. It is admirably situated for the defense of Havana, and it alone could probably prevent the passage of an invading fleet.

"Both the Cabana fortress and Morro castle are situated on an elevation of 40 or 50 feet. Below them, on the shore line of the harbor, strong batteries have recently been placed. On the land side of the Cabana fortress are strong bastions, protected by earthworks and guns that sweep the entire plateau. When we attempted to make an examination of this part of Cabana we were stopped and threatened with imprisonment if we did not get out. But we saw enough to give us a fair idea of the strength of the position.

"It would be folly for a war fleet to attempt to force the entrance to Havana alone. At a point off the coast, considerably to the left of the entrance to the harbor, there is what we call a 'dead angle.' From this point it would be possible for vessels to shell the forts with comparative safety, but it would be long range firing and at a considerable elevation. The ships at this point would be protected from the guns of Morro and Cabana to quite an extent by a slight rise in the plateau between them and the forts, which would prevent the guns in the forts from sighting the vessels.

"On the seacoast of the city itself, and to the right of the harbor, there are some batteries facing the ocean. Back of the town there are fortifications and earthworks defending it from a land attack. So far as we could see at the time of our visit, these fortifications were of only moderate strength and poorly armed. I understand, however, that within the last year Spain has strengthened them and equipped them with modern artillery.

"Under these circumstances the capture of Havana could be effected only by hard fighting by both land and naval forces. The Spanish are not to be despised as fighters. They make brave soldiers, and in a great engagement such as this would be they would give us a hard tussle. They do not seem to be making much progress with the insurgents, because the methods of warfare needed against the Cubans are very much like those we used against the Apaches, and no one in the Spanish army seems to know how to cope with them. In the defense of Havana against an attack by our forces, however, the Spanish soldiers would, no doubt, render a good account of themselves, although I have no doubt that the conflict would close in our favor."—New York World.

Plowed Up a Fortune.

Rev. Mr. Rhodes, living 12 miles east of Timpson, Tex., while plowing a field, unearthed 30,000 Mexican dollars. It seems that the money was buried in a leather satchel, which was almost rotten. Mr. Rhodes bought the place two years ago. For several years there has been digging in that community by unknown parties at night.

WANTS TO CURE ROUSS.

Blacksmith Says He Can Restore the Millionaire's Sight.

A blacksmith's helper in East St. Louis is about to attempt a task which the foremost of physicians of the country have been unable to accomplish.

His name is Charles Lindow.

He proposes to restore the power of sight to Charles Broadway Rouss, the blind millionaire of New York.

By dint of hard work and unusual enterprise Rouss amassed a fortune of $1,500,000. Hard work and unceasing attention to the details of his business told upon him, and now, though immensely wealthy, he is almost blind.

The best oculists of the country have tried in vain to restore his sight.

One day last week Rouss told a New York reporter that he would willingly pay $1,000,000 to the man who would restore his sight.

The proposition was telegraphed all over the country.

Charles Lindow saw the account of Rouss' promise and wrote to the afflicted New Yorker, proposing to cure him on the conditions named in the press dispatches. He has as yet received no reply, but he is confident that he will be given a chance to try his skill on the millionaire.

Lindow is a typical German blacksmith, with just a little more shrewdness than most of his class. He works in the Cairo Short Line shops and makes $1.40 per day.

He has a wife and seven children, and he supports them well, thanks to his knowledge of the ills that flesh is heir to.

To a reporter Lindow said:

"I know I can cure that New York man. I have cured others, and I ought to cure him.

"I cured a man named Gregg. He was a passenger conductor, but he became so blind that he couldn't do anything but shovel cinders about the roundhouse. I took his case, and in three weeks he was back on his train.

"Altogether I have cured four blind people in the last three years.

"I give medicine internally for blindness, as I find that in most cases the trouble comes from the stomach. Besides the internal treatment I give the patient an eye wash to take the inflammation out.

"If I get the $1,000,000, I will quit working hard and educate my six boys for the medical profession."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

TO STUDY THE STARS.

The Flagstaff (A. T.) Observatory to Be Removed to Mexico For Two Years.

It was announced that Lowell observatory is about to undertake a study of the stars, Dr. T. J. J. See having temporarily left the University of Chicago to join its staff. Mr. Percival Lowell intends to remove, probably for two years, the observatory from Flagstaff, A. T., to near the City of Mexico, and during this time Dr. See will undertake a survey of the southern heavens for the discovery and measurement of double stars and the determination of their orbits.

The equipment of the observatory will include the new telescope of 24 inches aperture, which has just been completed for Mr. Lowell by the Clarks of Cambridge. Dr. See is a Missouri man who studied under Helmholtz, and acquired his knowledge of astronomy under the masters of the Berlin observatory, graduating with the highest honors. He has had experience in practical astronomy both in Europe and this country, and for some time has held the chair of mathematical astronomy in the University of Chicago.

All the Quintuplets Dead.

The quintuplets born to Mrs. Oscar Lyons of Mayfield, Ky., on April 29 are all dead.

The first one died on May 4 and the others on May 11, 12, 13 and 14 respectively. In each case death was sudden, each little victim giving a scream as it expired. They were fully developed, and for awhile appeared to be in perfect health, but they soon became emaciated. The mother, though greatly distressed by the loss of her babies, is otherwise doing well. The bodies of the children have been embalmed.

It is believed that the little ones were worried to death by the sightseers who thronged to the Lyons house.—New York World.

A Deux Temps.

What is that you are saying?
You thought I was playing
You false with this waltz, this dance from the Duchess?

You thought I had rather be sitting and talking
With that little McManners
[illegible] the [illegible],
Or it may be perhaps in the corridors walking

Instead of remembering this dance here with you, sir—
This dance from the Duchess,
The lovely Grand Duchess,
The sweetest deux temps! Ah, if you but knew, sir

How I dote on the Duchess with its gliding and slowing
Soft measure for measure,
You'd know from such pleasure
My feet would never go straying and hiding.

What is that? You might have known it was true, sir?
[illegible] sure,
The [illegible], not the pleasure
Of dancing with you here? Well, really, you've [illegible]

[illegible] sir that such was the reason,
[illegible] sir,
If you go on in this strain, sir,
Walk and talk with McManners to the end of the season,

And to the end of my life, too, perhaps is my meaning.
[illegible] McManners,
Just when we encountered you waiting and leaning

Against the bay window, had confessed a relation
I guessed days ago—
His engagement you know,
To that little— Now, Harry. Don't kiss me before all creation
—Nora Perry.

A BUSY WOMAN.

She Edits a Paper, Manages a Household and Is Rearing Five Children.

[illegible] it is a great tax [illegible] and five children, [illegible] Mrs. Ann Doherty of North Dakota, who manages a house, [illegible] children and a newspaper. The newspaper is The Nelson County Independent and is a legacy to Mrs. Doherty from her husband, who died a couple of years ago.

MRS. ANN DOHERTY

The Independent is not an insignificant sheet by any means. It is the official paper of the county, and it is a popular exponent of the views of the Populists. So that Mrs. Doherty has to be wise in politics as well as in other things. But she conducts her paper satisfactorily and is making it even more of a success than it was under masculine management. Besides this she is bringing up her children to the admiration of the neighbors and is a housekeeper of repute.—Exchange.

White Wheels and Guest Wheels.

Vagaries of bicycle fashions are numerous. To dress in harmony with one's machine is one of the latest, now that colored wheels are in use. A woman flashing by the other morning in a white cloth suit, with white sailor hat, veil and gloves and mounted on a white wheel was a somewhat startling spectacle. Mourning wheels, or, more properly, wheels for use in mourning, are a Parisian caprice which the Frenchwoman finds necessary to her a la mode grief. In the meantime the woman of taste brings that necessary quality to bear upon her wheeling equipment as upon all others and wears an inconspicuous, suitable dress on as good but not showy a wheel as she can afford.

Speaking of wheels, a smart young woman says that one has to know how to ride one nowadays, just as one has to know how to play cards or tennis or do any popular thing, to be an agreeable visitor. "If I'm asked to a country house with a party," says this authority, "I put in my bicycle suit just as I used to carry my riding habit, for there is sure to be a wheeling expedition arranged. One does not have to take one's wheel either. One need not own one indeed, for it is the very modest house party entertainer these days who has not from one to six wheels at the disposal of her guests."—New York Times.

What Some Women Do.

It has sometimes been hinted by worthy people who sought to praise the American girl at the expense of her English cousin that the latter lacked the ingenuity of the former. But a list of the occupations in which various well born, well bred London women who are lacking in fortune and in training to earn money engage seems to indicate a certain amount of adaptability.

One woman made a specialty of belts and made them in leather, kid and ribbon to suit the prevailing styles. The fairy lamp shade and its companion piece for candles gave another woman her living. One who had lived a long time in India made and sold delicious chutney and curry powder.

Still others of housewifely tastes and attainments gained a reputation and an income from homemade jam, iced salted almonds and deviled biscuits. Their clientele is in each case among personal friends, and the dainties are sold at prices sufficiently below the confectioners' to profit the buyers as well as the sellers.

Some women whose taste runs to dogs take the pet canines of other women out for daily airings. Others take charge of birds, attending to the ornithological rites of feeding, bathing and the like.

Bertha G. Lamme.

One of the delegates to the convention of the National Electric Light association at the Grand Central palace, New York city, is Miss Bertha G. Lamme, the only woman electrical engineer in the country so far as known. Miss Lamme attracted a good deal of attention because her fame had preceded her. She is a graduate of the Ohio university of Columbus and is connected with the engineering department of the Westinghouse works in Pittsburg. In the last few years she has invented several electrical devices.

Japan's Empress.

The empress of Japan has discarded the picturesque costumes of her country. Her majesty's wardrobe is made in Paris, and she has a decided preference for tight fitting, small waisted gowns. The royal example is followed by the ladies of the court, and state functions no longer present their former kaleidoscopic appearance. It is a curious coincidence that the outside of Japanese costume combines all the latest ideas on dress reform embodied by its apostles here and in Europe.

Utica's Woman's Club.

The cordial spirit of reciprocity and camaraderie which is more and more signalizing the woman's club movement was evidenced recently in the great club gathering in Utica, N. Y. The New Century club of that place threw open its beautiful clubhouse for a reception to 26 clubs of central New York and entertained about 300 women.

Boils

It is often difficult to convince people their blood is impure, until dreadful carbuncles, abscesses, boils, scrofula or salt rheum, are painful proof of the fact. It is wisdom now, or whenever there is any indication of blood, to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and prevent such eruptions and suffering. "I had a dreadful carbuncle abscess, red, fiery, fierce and sore. The doctor attended me over seven weeks. When the abscess broke, the pains were terrible, and I thought I should not live through it. I heard and read so much about Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I decided to take it, and my husband, who was suffering with boils, took it also. It soon purified our

GRANT AND UNCLE BEN.

The President Remembered the Old Man Who Was Kind to Him.

D. R. Garrison told a story to General Schofield at the Dent House which illustrates to a certain extent the kind heartedness of General Grant. Grant was a great lover of horses, and while he was president he came on a visit to St. Louis, and Mr. Garrison, at that time president of the old Pacific road, took him out to his farm. They started off in a buggy for a drive, and after going some distance met an old man going along on a horse. The man was in his shirt sleeves and wore a straw hat, but Grant recognized him, and, stopping the buggy, he got out, and walking up to the old man put out his hand and said, "Hello, Uncle Ben! How are you and the old woman getting along?"

The old man was Uncle Ben Sappington. He welcomed the president and said that he was getting along very well. He remarked that they were happy as long as they had enough to eat and a pipe and a little tobacco.

"Uncle Ben, wouldn't you like to be postmaster of Meramec township?" asked the president.

Jenny Lind Sang For Him.

The late Edward V. Eccles, the veteran musician, was fond of telling this anecdote of his youth: "It was about the beginning of the war," he invariably began. "I was then a clerk in a large music publishing house on Chestnut street. One day a well dressed, quiet little woman entered the store and asked me to show her some music of a classical nature. We struck up quite a conversation, in the course of which I asked her if she had heard the great Jenny Lind, who was then the toast of the town. She laughed and said, 'Oh, yes. I have heard her. Have you?' I told her that I hadn't had that pleasure, and that I had very little prospects of hearing her, the price of admission was so high. She laughed again and then she hunted me a song she had picked out and asked me to play the accompaniment for her while she tried it. She sang so beautifully that I played like one in a dream. When she had finished, she thanked me, and with a rare smile she said, 'You cannot say now that you have never heard Jenny Lind!' She thanked me again, and left me dumfounded."—Philadelphia Record.

If it required an annual outlay of $100 00 to insure a family against any serious consequences from an attack of bowel complaint during the year there are many who would feel it their duty to pay it: that they could not afford to risk their lives and that of their family for such an amount. Any one can get this assurance for 25 cents, that being the price of a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. In almost every neighborhood some one has died from an attack of bowel complaint before medicine could be procured or a physician summoned. One or two doses of this remedy will cure any ordinary case. It never fails. Can you afford to take the risk for so small an amount? For sale by Melville Bros., next to Post Office; C. W. ENGLAND'S GREAT NAVY

Why It Would Be Practically Useless In a War With Germany.

Germany possesses a large commercial marine and enormous trade, with a relatively small extent of coast line. Our fleets could undoubtedly injure her trade, but upon that she is not dependent for her national existence. She has land frontiers across which she can always import any food stuffs and other supplies which she cannot produce for herself. By stopping her sea borne trade we might cripple her financially, but we could scarcely hope, if she were in a determined mood, to bring her to her knees. To do that we should have to destroy her fleet, to seize her naval ports and perhaps even to undertake the landing on her shores of a large expeditionary force. I do not desire to insist upon the expeditionary force. I will contemplate only the destruction or capture of her fleet and of her ports and the shipping in them, and I would ask, Have we sent to sea—and indeed do we possess—such a naval force as could affect those ends? The answer must be in the negative.

The German coasts, both in the Baltic and in the North sea, are surrounded by shallows, and are, even in the most favorable circumstances, difficult of approach for large ships. In war time, with buoys removed and lights extinguished, it would be impossible for ironclads drawing 25 feet and upward—as all our modern ironclads without exception do—to get within the longest gunshot of Wilhelmshaven, Hamburg, Kiel, Stettin or Danzig, where alone, unless we could persuade the German fleets to come out into the open, we could expect to deal a staggering blow.

To dream of attacking German coasts and harbors, fortified as they are, without the co-operation of ironclads would be sheer folly even if we had the co-operation of a landing force. Yet we have not today a single light draft ironclad fit for operations within range of modern guns or herself carrying guns of that sort. For years past we have built large ironclads and no others. I have nothing to urge against the large ironclads. Other things being equal, the large ironclad should be more formidable and more safe in a fleet action in deep water than the small one. But that is not the only point to be considered in thinking of a war with Germany.

We all recollect the futile appearance off the German coasts of the French fleet in 1870. Germany simply sat still behind her sand banks and her forts and did almost nothing, until at length the French, baffled by a hard winter and perplexed by the coaling problem, began to grow weary of the enforced inactivity and went home again. As Germany did with France in 1870 so might she elect to do with Great Britain in 1896. If she did, we should find ourselves condemned to fill a comparatively passive role and we could do nothing decisive unless late in the day [illegible] ships of the types which ought to be ready to be well represented in our navy, but which have not a single exponent.—Nineteenth Century.

The Cost of Religion.

Both as a purchaser of materials and supplies and as an employer the church has important relations to business. It is manifest therefore, that the financial affairs of the church must be on a large scale when all its interests are considered. It takes $10,355,000 annually to pay the bills of the Protestant Episcopal church, $23,863,000 to pay those of the Methodist Episcopal church, nearly $14,000,000 for the expenses and contributions of the Presbyterian church (northern), $11,673,000 for those of the regular Baptists and $10,355,000 for those of the Congregational denomination, making an aggregate of $88,000,000 every year contributed by 10,768,000 members—an average of $8.16 per member. The grand total for all denominations could hardly be less than $150,000,000, and it might be many millions larger. Most of this is made up of voluntary contributions. The value of church buildings, lots and furniture in 1890 was about $680,000,000. It is quite probable that it is now fully $800,000,000.—Forum.

THE

What Huxley, the Great English Scientist, Considered the Best Start in Life.

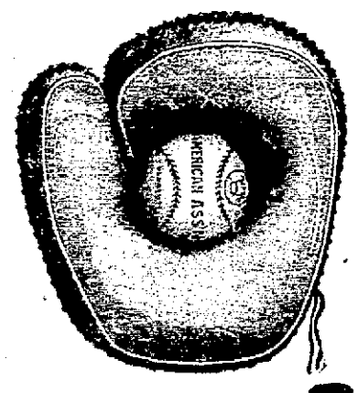

The great English scientist, Huxley, said the best start in life is a sound stomach. Weak stomachs fail to digest food properly, because they lack the proper quantity of digestive acids (lactic and hydrochloric) and peptogenic products; the most sensible remedy in all cases of indigestion is to take, after each meal, one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they supply, in a pleasant, harmless form, all the elements that weak stomachs lack.

They increase flesh, insure pure blood, strong nerves, a bright eye and clear complexion, because all these result only from wholesome food well digested.

HUNG HIM IN EFFIGY.

YELLOW FEVER IS RAGING.

This Together With Desertions Is Greatly Reducing the Spanish Force and Causing the Greatest Apprehension.

TAMPA, Fla., June 1.—Private advices from Cuba announce that yellow fever is raging there. On the 29th a train from Matanzas brought into Havana from one battalion 69 men afflicted with the fever. This, united with the continued desertions, is reducing the Spanish forces greatly.

Ninety soldiers from the Madras battalion in the Vuelta Abjo have joined forces with Macee on account of the scant supply of rations.

Reports were received to the effect that an expedition had landed near Marari in Manzanillo. Five empty boats have been found on the beach.

Last week explosions occurred on the Mantanzas railroad line, almost completely destroying an armored car with troops.

General Weyler was hung in effigy Saturday in Havana. A strange figure, clad in the Spanish official uniform, was suspended from the upper balustrade of Dr. Cuervo's residence on the main street of the city.

VIEWING THE RUINS.

Every Road Into St. Louis Ran Excursion Trains Sunday.

ST. LOUIS, June 1.—Every railroad entering this city ran excursion trains Sunday. They brought scores of thousands of people to view the devastation and ruin wrought by the awful storm of Wednesday. The streets of the district were thronged with visitors all day. They came from almost every town and city within a radius of 300 miles, and nearly all day a cold, drizzling rain fell.

Through the crowded streets all day long came funeral processions. Nearly 100 burial permits were issued by the health department Saturday, and every hearse in the city was kept in constant use.

At early dawn people began to crowd into the city morgue. Many came in search of friends, but for the most part people who visited them were drawn by a morbid desire to see the mangled corpses of the unfortunate victims of the tornado.

All day long the officers on duty were busy keeping people moving in line and out of the viewing room of the morgue. Every few minutes some would think they had discovered some one whom they knew among the bodies exposed for view.

Superintendent Mack of the morgue had a trying time in answering questions in regard to the bodies and taking names and descriptions of persons who have not been seen by their friends since the storm.

There were people from points in all directions, far and near. Cincinnati, Chicago, Louisville, Indianapolis, Kansas City and scores of smaller places were represented. From such towns came anxious people inquiring for lost friends.

Mrs. Wm. Boynton, residing at No. 126 South Pierce Street, went to W. M. Melville's drug store at No. 147 North Main Street and procured a box of Doan's Kidney Pills. Read her experience. I have had kidney trouble for over ten or twelve years and during all that time I have suffered more or less with dizzy pains in my head, aching in my kidneys with pains shooting upwards towards my shoulders or downward through my hips. I could usually sleep well, but after my extra exertion or excitement my back would ache nights and prevent me from sleeping. There was an inclination to urinate frequently and I would get up many times during the night. Morning I would be tired out and there was much soreness or lameness in my back. Though I have so far taken but one box of Doan's Kidney Pills I am feeling ever so much better. They have done me the most good of anything that I have taken. I can sleep all night now and I do not have that lingering pain in my back. I feel that the chronic pains and aches are leaving me and that it is due to Doan's Kidney Pills. I have no objections to your using my name as one who can from my own experience highly recommend Doan's Kidney Pills and vouch for their being what they are represented.

Doan's Kidney Pills are for sale by all dealers; price 50 cents. Mailed by Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the United States. Remember the name Doan's, take no other.

The Ten Horned Texan Cow.

The most wonderful of the many Texas freaks and monstrosities that has ever came under our notice was the famous "ten horned Jack county cow." This remarkable freak of nature was born in Jack county, in the state above mentioned, in 1887. She was literally "horns from head to foot." At the termination of each of her four legs, in the place where the regulation split hoof should have been, were monstrous crooked and gnarled horns, seemingly solid throughout. These hoof horns were not of the clear and semitransparent, finely plicated material characteristic of the horns of the bovine family, but appeared more like ram's horns than anything else. In 1891 or 1892 these hoof horns had grown to such a length (averaging over 2 feet each) that the cow was taken off the range and sold to a Mr. Manley of Paris, Tex.

At that time, besides the horns which were used in the place of hoofs, she had four others on her legs—one where each "dew claw" should have been. These dew claw horns, in addition to those just described, make a total of eight horns, which, with the two on her head, made the total of ten. The man who owned this queer beast before she was taken from the range, a Mr. Oliver, repeatedly sawed these extraordinary growths off, but they were so persistent and grew so rapidly that she was finally sold, because it was an utter impossibility for her to graze and stand up on hornlike stilts which made her legs from 18 inches to 2 feet longer than they should have been.—St. Louis Republic.

An Artist Without Arms.

The comrade without arms was a most assiduous worker. It was amusing to watch his mittened feet step out of their shoes and at the shortest notice proceed to do duty as hands. His nimble toes would screw and unscrew the tops of the color tubes or handle the brush as steadily as the best and deftest of fingers could handle it. Very much unlike any of us, he was most punctilious in the care he bestowed on his paint box, as also on his personal appearance. —Felix Moscheles in Century.

IN THE STRETCH.

Congress May Adjourn Sine Die at the End of the Week.

WASHINGTON, June 1.—The senate began the week with the intention of making it the last of the session if possible. Some senators put the day of adjournment as early as Thursday of of the present week, while others place it on Saturday and still others think it will be impossible to conclude before the first days of next week.

The imperative work before the senate in order to reach adjournment is to dispose of the conference reports on the ordinary appropriation bills, to vote upon the bond prohibitory bill and to consider the proposition to pass the river and harbor bill over the president's veto in case the bill receives the necessary two-thirds vote in the house to bring it to the senate.

Some senators, probably a majority, also feel that they are under obligations to press the filled cheese bill to a final issue, but there is a sufficiently strong minority opposed to this measure to prevent congress remaining in session for the sole purpose of passing it after the appropriation bills are out of the way. It would therefore appear that the hope of the friends of the bill must rest upon getting it through before all the appropriation conference reports are disposed of.

Considerable time will necessarily be spent upon bills on the calendar to which no objection is made, and also in executive session on nominations awaiting confirmation. Senator Morgan will probably also make an effort to get up the Cuban question in some connection.

The anti-bond bill will be pressed to a finish before adjournment Tuesday, unless there should be a violation of the unanimous agreement which was entered into Friday. The debate on this bill will consume the greater part of the time of the senate after 2 o'clock today and Tuesday, and it is possible that it may be necessary to extend the Tuesday session into the night in order to give all who may wish to speak an opportunity to do so.

Senator Butler has by no means finished his speech on this bill. Senator Brown has given notice of a set speech and Senator Cullom is also anxious to find opportunity for the delivery of a prepared speech. It is believed that the bond bill will have a majority of about five votes in its favor.

The appropriation bills still in conference are: The Indian, postoffice, naval, sundry civil, District of Columbia, fortifications and general deficiency. The others have either become laws or are in the hands of the president. The conferees on the postoffice bill were in session Saturday and reached an understanding on all items of disagreement except on the senate's amendment for the consolidation of small postoffices with large ones, and this will probably be arranged Monday.

The items of serious dispute between the houses are the Indian schools and the fees of attorneys in the Indian bill, the battleships and the price of armor plate in the naval bill and the question of the distribution of the charity funds in the District of Columbia.

It is not expected that there will be any prolonged debate on the river and harbor bill if it is sent to the senate by the house. There were nine votes against this bill when it passed originally, and its friends claim there will be no difficulty in passing it a second time, notwithstanding the president's objections.

Beginning Tuesday or Wednesday the sessions of the senate will probably commence at 11 o'clock and several sessions are among the probabilities of the week.

In the House.

WASHINGTON, June 1.—The closing days of the session in the house will be mainly devoted to the consideration of conference reports, but the feature of the week will be the passage of the river and harbor bill over the president's veto. All the friends of the bill who are absent have received peremptory telegraphic summons to be present on Tuesday when the bill is reported back from the committee. The several votes taken on it already demonstrate that it has considerably more than a two-thirds majority and its friends express no doubt of the result. It is not probable that much time will be allowed for debate. The conference reports will be given the right of way whenever presented.

Under the rules six days of the session are suspension days, and this fact will enable the house to clear the calendar in a brief time of several pending bills including the Phillips commission bill, the Erdman arbitration bill and several other bills. The Johnson-Stokes contested election case, which was left hanging when the house adjourned Friday, will be disposed of today. The partisans of Mr. Johnson, whose claims to the seat were rejected on two votes, will be directed toward ousting Stokes and thus declaring the seat vacant.

Some fear of a veto of the general deficiency bill is expressed among the members of the house, because it carries the French spoliation claims.

Licked by the Cubans.

HAVANA, June 1.—The Spanish guerilla band of Saguain, operating on the plantation of Aronia, murdered five noncombatants. Troops acting as a convoy had an engagement near Manicaragua, in which they left Captain Ascension and one soldier killed and five wounded.

Japanese Minister Resigns.

YOKOHAMA, June 1.—Count Mutsu Munemitsu, minister of foreign affairs, has resigned owing to ill health. Inouye Ki, minister of education, will act as minister of foreign affairs ad interim.

Traction Car Accident.

CONVENTION HALL.

St. Louis Committee Say It Can Be Made Ready Within Two Weeks.

WASHINGTON, June 1.—Contrary to reports there has been a communication between Chairman Carter of the national Republican committee and the St. Louis local committee having charge of the arrangements for the national Republican convention, respecting the question of any change in the date for holding the convention on June 16, because of the possibility of the local committee not being able to repair the roof of the convention hall by that time.

The chairman is leaving that matter in the hands of the persons to whom it is entrusted and does not expect to take any initiatory steps regarding it. Mr. Carter's advices are that about two week's time will be required to put the building in condition for the convention, assuming that an adequate force of workmen can readily be obtained to do the work.

My face to-day is the living picture of health, and Clinic Kidney Cure has made it such. I had suffered twenty-seven years with the disease, and to-day I feel ten years younger than I did one year ago. I can obtain some wonderful certificates of its medical qualities. H. F. Vorthamp.

If President Cleveland had recognized the belligerent rights of Cuba, then Spain would not have dared to sentence the Competitor men to death. They would have been in the eyes of the United States regular prisoners of war. Civilized nations do not shoot ordinary prisoners of war. At most the Competitor crew would have been blockade runners, mere smugglers, and smuggling is not in modern times a crime to be punished with death. If it had been, the United States would have shot many Englishmen during our civil war.

The Spanish soldiers in Cuba are badly fed, and they have not been paid for months. They do not like it. The Cuban soldiers, on the contrary, are not fighting for pay. They fight for liberty and live off the country. In the districts where Gomez and Maceo are in command the rearing of cattle and live stock is fostered, and these animals are carefully guarded for the food of the patriot army. This, with sugar cane juice, is enough to keep any army in good condition. The Cubans declare they can live for five years in this way. As to clothing, in a climate like that of Cuba it does not count. Arms, ammunition and men constitute the needs of the revolutionists, although they are not badly in want of even these, if their story is to be believed.

CITY LEAGUE

Opened at Faurot's Park, Saturday Afternoon.

The City Base Ball league was opened last Saturday and surpassed the expectations of everyone who went to see the game. There was a good crowd present, and it was the universal opinion that the game was superior in many respects to the games that Somers' aggregation used to attempt to place before the base ball enthusiasts. Should the remainder of the games be as interesting as was this game, the City League will be well supported. The game was played between the High School and the Marquette clubs, and was first class from start to finish. The High School boys put up an errorless game, and have some excellent players among their number. Up to the fourth inning no man crossed the plate. In the fourth the Marquette's succeeded in scoring two runs, but after that they were unable to push any of their men further than third base. The High School team scored four runs in the fifth inning, three in the sixth and one in the eighth, making the score eight to two in the High school's favor. The Marquettes, in the fourth inning, had two men out and one man on third, when Blackman fortunately landed on the ball for a home run, to center field. Their hopes ascended, but only for a short time. Three hundred and fifty people paid admission and a few others climbed the fence or came through the woods. All were pleased with the game. Score:

Batteries, Faurot and Sealts, High School; Underwood, Altschul and Blackman, Marquettes; home runs, Smythe and Blackman; three base hit, Regan; struck out, by Faurot 1, Underwood; Altschul 2. Umpire, Doc O'Brien.

The game yesterday was between the Shamrocks and the Lima Stars, latter winning by a score of thirteen to twelve. Had Teddy Whiteman and "Kid" Barnes been present, they could have received many profitable pointers. Up to the fifth inning the game was rather loosely played, but after that they settled down and played, an interesting game. The game was marked by several sensational plays. About four hundred persons witnessed the game, and all were satisfied with the first appearance of the Lima League and were assured that some interesting sport would be furnished by the four local clubs.

The next game will take place Wednesday, between the High school and Shamrocks.

LIVE WIRE

Nearly Electrocuted a Man Last Saturday Night.

IRA NEWALL'S CLOSE CALL.

A Telephone Wire Falls Across a Trolley Wire—A Horse Thrown—While Receiving the Horse Ira Newell Is Badly Hurt.

Ira Newell came very nearly being killed last Saturday evening by taking hold of a telephone wire that was heavily charged with electricity. Newell is a porter at the Lima House and was accompanying Miss Newman with some baggage to the home of her sister, Mrs Albert Koch, on west Market street. When near the corner of Market and McDonald streets they saw a horse fall to the ground Newall hastened to the assistance of the driver, when he saw a wire swinging down in front of the horse He was warned to be careful of the wire and answered that it was only a telephone wire. He took hold of it with the intention of wrapping it around the telephone pole to prevent any more accidents As he grasped the wire he was thrown violently to the ground He could not free himself, as the heavy charge of electricity tightly contracted all the muscles in his body The pain was great, and he groaned and cried loudly for help The accident occurred in front of Mr. G M Sprague's home, who heard the cries and ran out to learn the cause He saw Newall lying on the ground writhing in agony, and his hand tightly grasping the electric wire. Mr. Sprague noticed an umbrella standing against a light pole, and with the crooked end of it drew, with some difficulty, the wire from the hand. Newall was carried into the home of Mr Sprague and doctors were hastily called. Grosjean's ambulance was summoned, and conveyed the injured boy the to Myers' hospital When first carried into the house he was unconscious, but later revived and cried from the pains that were present in every part of his body, His right hand was frightfully burned, the flesh on the fingers having been burned entirely from the bones. The doctors think nothing serious will result from the accident, and believes he will have the use of the second and third fingers, but the index and little finger will always be still Newell is about 18 years old, and when asked where his home was replied that he had none To day he seems to have greatly recovered from the shock that nearly destroyed his life.

The wire he caught hold of was a telephone wire that ran across the street to the residence of J. C. Thompson From some cause it had broken and fallen across the trolley wires, thus serving as a conductor for an extremely heavy charge of electricity from the street railway wires. A motorman severed the wire from its fastenings to prevent further accidents.

BECOME CITIZENS.

The Old Policemen Remove Their Badges and Step Down and Out.

While the New Men Don Their Metropolitan Uniforms and Become Guardians of the Peace.

The new police force is now a reality and in appearance, at least it is an improvement over the old force Haller, Lehman, Croy, Furry, Vena, Urich, Baker and Blair are again private citizens, Roney, Wingate and Watts being the only members of the old force who did not lose their official heads. Each of these three old men fare better under the new administration than they did under the old, for all have been promoted. Wingate is the present lieutenant, Roney has been promoted to the office of city detective, and Watts is first sargeant.

The new uniforms are decidedly metropolitan, consisting of double-breasted coats of dark blue, trousers of the same goods, and light colored helmets Captain Bell as chief wears a cap instead of a helmet, and his coat is double-breasted His badge is a small one and gold plated Lieut. Wingate also wears a cap and has epaulets on his shoulders Sergeant Watts will wear three stripes on his coat sleeves.

Heretofore considerable delay has frequently occurred in the police service on account of the inability of citizens to get an officer from the station by telephone, there being no one there about half the time, especially during the day

In order to relieve this deficiency Capt Bell has created the office of police sergeant, and hereafter it will be the duty of that officer to remain at the station during such time as the chief may be absent.

During this month the police will patrol as follows

Day force—Conway, North of Wayne street. Burns, Wayne to river; McCoy, South Side

Night force—O'Brien and Seeds, north of Wayne street; Goebel and Cretsinger, Wayne to river, east of Main. Lilly, west of Main; Bacome and Smalley, South Side.

Plantation Table Cover.

The latest novelty for afternoon tea cloths is to have them bordered by handsome hems of soft pink, sky blue or lemon linen. These make a harmonious finish to the tone of the drawing room. For a small table a rather neat arrangement is made from a gaudy yellow bandanna handkerchief. It is embroidered at intervals with scraps of floss and tinsel, haphazard, such as the whim and energy of the owner prompts. From the border hangs a fringe of doily ribbons in dull crimson and yellow, studded at equal distance with big Japanese glass beads which are threaded through the ribbon.—New York World.

Mrs. Blaine's Donation.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe stirred many hearts by her recent appeal in behalf of the Armenian sufferers, but none more strongly than the hearts of her own family. Her daughter, Mrs. Laura E. Richards, whose home is in Maine, started several little boys out to solicit contributions. One of these little boys was Mrs. Richards' own son, and one of the persons whom he asked was Mrs. James G. Blaine. In answer to his appeal she asked, "Do you think I ought to give something for the Armenians?" He replied, "Yes, I do." She then asked, "How much do you think I ought to give?" This was a poser for the little fellow, but Mrs. Blaine relieved his perplexity by presenting him with $100 for the relief fund, to his great delight.—Boston Woman's Journal.

It Was a Georgia Mule.

A number of indignant citizens were grouped about a dead mule in Perry street lane The mule had just dragged a load of kindling wood to its destination, and when the driver, who had been belaboring the animal, stopped at the door where the wood was to be delivered the mule sank to the ground and remained motionless between the shafts. Several passersby who had witnessed the occurrence hurried to the spot and were outspoken in their criticisms of the driver's brutal indifference One of the bystanders took the driver severely to task for not trying to save the beast's life, but the driver went on unloading the kindling wood and carrying it in the house, with apparent indifference When he had unloaded his cart he coolly mounted the seat gathered up the reins and shouted, "Wake up dar, you Rastus!" The mule cocked up one ear, opened one eye, wabbled to his feet and shambled off up the lane Then the crowd melted away, and an air of peace and quietness settled down upon the neighborhood.—Savannah News.

WAYS OF ALLIGATORS

How the Female Lays Her Eggs and Cares For Her Young—A Mother Will Fight Anything That Threatens Her Babies. Diet and Luxuries of Alligators.

One of the sights most eagerly watched for by the newly arrived Florida visitor, as he glides over the lakes and rivers of that genial land, is the alligator A few years ago this desire was easily gratified, but the great saurian is comparatively rare nowadays along the older routes of travel. This is due partly to the bullets of the visitors and partly to the shots and traps of the more legitimate alligator hunter, who finds in that pursuit the chief means of support for himself and his family.

It is in the dense fastnesses of the inland swamps and everglades that alligators may be seen in great numbers on a bright day, basking in the sunshine. They are gregarious and love to assemble in such places, where they bring their two rows of strong teeth together with a prodigious clatter and roar with a noise that resembles thunder.

The female makes her nest in the sand near the water's edge, scraping a hole with her paws and dropping the eggs in a regular layer Then she scrapes grass, leaves, mud and sand over them, on these places another layer, and so continues alternate layers until the nest contains from 30 to 40 eggs. As the hole is rarely deep enough to hold all these, the result is a decided mound easily detected by the experienced hunter, who finds ready sale for the eggs as curiosities. They are white, hard shelled and rather larger than a hen's egg If he prefers to await their hatching, he secures a fine lot of little alligators, for which also there is always a ready sale.

While she thus leaves her prospective children to the doubtful guardianship of the earth, the mother does not desert them. Patiently she keeps watch over the nest in which they lie, never allowing that mound of sand to be long out of her sight. How she knows exactly when the little folk are ready, like the emancipated chicken, to step out of their shells and take their first peep at the world, who shall say? But, all the same, it is a fact that, however far afield her excursions may previously have been, the day and the hour of that happy event in her family circle find her on the spot ready to gather the little ones under her wing, as it were, and lead them to their future home in the water that lies before them.

This watchful care the mother continues until her babies are old enough to forage for themselves and their scales are firm enough to enable them to dispense with her protection. The extent to which the young alligators or crocodiles require this watchful care can hardly be realized by those that are not familiar with their habits, for the little ones are terribly persecuted by birds and beasts and even by their kinsmen, the bull alligators which sometimes eat a dozen or two of their own children at a meal. The mother on such occasions has been known to turn and fight the unnatural monsters with such fury as to put them to flight It is not only the bull alligator that she will attack when alarmed for the safety of her young—she often holds the most experienced hunters at bay until her little charges have time to flee to a place of safety

The sight presented by the mother, surrounded and followed by a whole brood of her little ones, is a pleasing one, but let an enemy come in view and the scene ceases to be pleasant In the twinkling of an eye the little ones dash away into the mysterious shadows, and the placid mother becomes transformed into a raging fury, fairly churning the quiet waters into waves in her mad rush to do battle with the intruders. Without this incentive of maternal affection, however, it is but seldom that an alligator or a crocodile attacks a human being

The lower animals are less fortunate. Cattle in the far south, where the open ranges and shallow waters extend a tempting invitation to roam, are sometimes seen with shortened tails, an abbreviation for which the wily alligator is responsible Pigs rooting too near the water's edge and unobservant of the loglike form lying close at their side are often caught by a lightninglike sweep of the alligator's formidable tail.

But the most cherished of all tidbits to an alligator is a nice, plump dog The saurian's peculiar attraction toward this animal is so well known to hunters that they frequently imitate the yelp of a dog to entice their prey within range, and the call never fails of its purpose The squeal of a pig is almost as effective.

These dainty bits, however, are rather in the line of luxuries For a steady, everyday diet the alligator depends upon fish, and it haunts those localities in rivers or lakes where its natural prey most abounds. It catches the fish by diving [illegible] under a passing shoal and snatching two or three in its open jaws as it passes through the shoal Then rising to the surface, it tosses them in the air for the purpose of ejecting the water that has entered its mouth along with the fish and adroitly catches them in their descent —Helen Harcourt in Philadelphia Times

AS TO BROILERS.

Two Weeks Only Allowed For the Process of Fattening

Broilers should not be killed until they attain a weight of at least one pound each. This size is profitably salable only very early in the season. As soon as supplies become at all liberal 1½ to 2 pounds should be the weight aimed at Four pounds per pair is the highest desirable weight for broilers.

Fattening broilers is by no means an easy task, as the tendency at their age is toward growth rather than flesh and an attempt at forcing is apt to result in disease of some kind. A chicken should be 2 months old before any attempt at fattening is made. Two weeks must be allowed for the process The doomed birds must be separated from the rest of the flock and shut up where they cannot see the other birds. They must be fed and watered systematically Feed three times a day and scatter a little millet seed on the ground between meals Feed chiefly corn, because it is very rich in fat producing elements, but give them something else also for the sake of the variety

Fowls intended for market may be either scalded or dry picked, but not so with broilers For these dry picking is the only method allowable. Of course it is the most expensive, but if it pays to raise broilers at all it pays to dress them properly A chick only a few weeks old is a very tender bird, and if scalded it will be found impossible to pick it without occasionally rubbing a little of the skin off These spots will darken and give the broiler a stale look The scalding will also increase the tendency to decay With dry picking not only will the birds keep much longer but the natural firmness of the flesh prevents all fear of skinning The method of dressing frequently has as much to do with the price as the quality. The best prices for broilers are realized between April 15 and May 15. The season drags on until July but the appearance of the roasters lessens the demand and reduces the price

Among the pure breeds White Wyandottes and Light Brahmas are generally considered to make the best broilers They are also excellent crossed. White Leghorns on Plymouth Rocks are preferred by some. When there is no objection to white skinned birds, the Black Minorcas crossed on the Black Langshans are excellent The Houdan crossed on the Partridge Cochin also gives a plump carcass for broiling purposes.—Exchange

Fattening Poultry.

To fatten poultry it is best to confine them in coops arranged side by side along the shelves in a room kept for the purpose It will be necessary to have the coops exposed at the back so that they may be cleaned at least once a day, and immediately after the feeding The coops should be littered with clean, dry sawdust Hard wood sawdust is best, but chaff is excellent The lower part of the back of the coops is open for two inches, so that a small scraper may be used to rake out the droppings on to a tray or common dustpan Three weeks' full feedings of oatmeal, scalded with skimmilk and fed warm and thick is the best food for fattening The drink should be sweet skimmilk.

Table Poultry.

Poultry intended for the table should be put in a coop by themselves for about two weeks, feeding them principally on old wheat, with plenty of pure water Then, when they are fat, select the best, kill and dress them and hang up by the legs for a day, so that they will drain thoroughly See that they are kept in a cool place If this is done you will find the flesh juicy and better The way to kill and dress poultry is not properly understood by many housekeepers, and if they do know they forget to put their knowledge into practice

Black Orpingtons

Black Orpington fowls originated in England from Barred Plymouth Rock Black Minorca and Black Langshan crosses The result was a Minorca style on a Langshan body But Orpingtons will never be popular in America We have a breed that is not only better, but which presents the same likeness, the old Black Java, and we doubt if ever a black fowl dressed as pretty a yellow skin as the Java and it is a question if these English Orpingtons can lay as many eggs in a year as our Javas can

Beware of Vermin.

In large flocks of poultry the utmost diligence must be exercised in order to keep them free from vermin and disease either of which will thin out a flock in a very short time A good plan is to commence with clean premises and to clean them daily Utmost cleanliness should be the watchword of the poultry man or woman Begin with only one variety Select after careful consideration the breed you like best and can care for best, and work on that line until you can improve on it

A Good Bone Mill.

It seems to be a settled fact that fowls will leave all other food to eat fresh bones ground If hens eat it, they will be compelled to lay eggs Where the flock is not too large the farmer's wife can make a very good bone mill with a [illegible] good chopping block, an old axe [illegible] of the boys. It is a simple construction, and there is but one part of it that is liable to ever get out of order

MONEY IN EGGS.

How a Successful Young Woman Went to Work at the Business.

"When my father died five years ago," said a pretty Philadelphian recently, "I found myself really thrown on the world and pretty well excited over the dark prospect The money that I had in hand was so reduced, owing to illness, with physician's charges, medicines and so on, that with the greatest economy I could only have made it last six months.

"Well, in the first place," she continued, "I moved a little out of town, not to the wilderness by any means—just 25 minutes from the center of the city I rented a little old house with a garden. The hennery I had built by the country carpenter after a plan of my own. Not all in one as are almost all the houses for poultry which one finds on farms, but with three distinct apartments—for roosting, laying and hatching respectively. I bought a stove for cold weather. Then came laying in my stock. I read a couple of good books on the subject and learned what breeds were best for producing eggs and what for table use. I chatted with a number of country people on the subject and persuaded them into accompanying me when I purchased my first fowls and eggs for hatching "

"Did you use an incubator?"

"The second year of my experiment I bought one and gave it a fair trial, but afterward sold it and continued in the old fashioned way I found that the chicks raised in this method were hardier by far For the mothers and the broods I had constructed a number of small wire pens This was another expense, but a necessary one and repaid me well in the end

"To get down to the profits—that momentous question Within six months I was making $15 a week. Of course from this sum I had to subtract expenses of corn and meal, etc., with the slight wage demanded by a country boy for an hour or two of service each day The second six months the money was considerably increased by sale of young poultry for table use And by the second year, as you can tell from the fact that I felt able to afford an incubator, the business was in a flourishing condition "

"How did you find a ready market for your produce?"

"I didn't find one ready, but I made it. Among my friends were several families who were only too happy to secure 'fresh eggs' that were fresh in verity I persuaded a grocery dealer to patronize my farm, and later on I made my wares known at two hotels. Things of this kind come little by little. A woman who expects to step into a pile of money the first few months that her chicken farm is in existence will be sure of disappointment. 'Genius is infinite patience,' said a great French writer, and there is no work in which the quotation applies so thoroughly as mine. Then, too, besides the patience, one has to work hard and keep both eyes open for anything like a chance to do business."

"What are some of the mistakes into which a novice falls?" I asked.

"Oh, they are many and various. Perhaps the most serious is that of imagining that the stock does not need any especial care beyond feeding This absurd idea is a very pervailing one It is absolutely necessary that everything about your poultry house be made clean, fresh and sweet at least once a day."

Thus spoke a very successful young woman—one who is now no longer obliged to worry about the future The advice seemed to me excellent, and the idea to be just that for which many a woman is on the lookout—those women who are willing to venture a little and work, but who find themselves with no talents except the practical ones

The White Minorcas.

The White Minorca has too few friends for so valuable a breed It is very handsome and has plenty of style and size to back it up The weight demanded by standard for the White Minorcas has deterred many from breeding them, and made many who have attempted it drop them But this is likely to be remedied sooner or later

A Reliable Test

The following method for testing eggs is said to be reliable Hold the egg so that the large end is uppermost. If the air space is on the side or midway of the egg, it is doubtful if it will hatch The weaker germs will be found down in the small end of the egg, and if the chick hatches it is not likely to come out before the twenty second day Other germs will be found near the middle of the egg and such usually hatch during the twenty first day The stronger embryo is found at the top or the large end of the egg and will hatch on the twentieth day or the beginning of the twenty-first.

Look Out For This.

Cracked wheat when presented to poultry is in a comparatively easily digested form and is readily disposed of by them, but wheat fed whole has destroyed many a promising brood of high bred chicks before they were 2 weeks old

Weak Legs.

If hens have weak legs and yet seem otherwise well, see that their houses are dry, that they are not overfed and place them in a yard by themselves Sometimes leg weakness is caused by an overfeed of sulphur

A NESTOR AMONG HORSES.

Here Is One Which Is Said to Have Been Sixty-four Years Old.

In many recent prints there have been remarks on the age and longevity of the horse which some readers may consider very amusing. In "Skeavington's Modern History of Farriery," now before me, I find a record of a horse at that time—1822—to be in his sixty-fourth year. The horse at that period belonged to the Mersey and Iswell Navigation company. He was bred by Edward Robinson of Willgrave farm, in Woolston, a short distance from Warrington. When young—and indeed until he reached the age of 50—the animal manifested an extremely vicious disposition, not only to human beings, but also to dogs and any other creatures that happened to oppose his progress or stood in his way. This temper was particularly shown when at the dinner hour or other periods a cessation of labor took place. He was impatient to get into the stable on such occasions and would use his heels and teeth to remove any impediment placed in his way.

The writer says his front teeth were perfect, but very long, while his bridle teeth were tusks, which, after growing to an unusual length, became half inverted and described an uncouth semicircle, convexing to the upper jaw. His lower lip was neither so loose nor so pendulous as is generally seen in very old horses. His eyes were described as being very remarkably placed in the socket and were at the same time so bright and clear, presenting altogether so perfect an appearance as to afford a strong presumption that his sight was as good as that which is usually found in horses at the age of 12 or 14 years.

Thirty years of his life, it seems, were spent in a mill, and the remainder principally in the Mersey and Iswell Navigation company towing boats. When in full flesh and in the vigor of life, he would scarcely have measured 15 hands high. He grazed in summer on the banks of the Mersey and in winter was taken into the stable and fed on mashes and soft feed. He then possessed the use of all his faculties in tolerable perfection; was able to lie down and rise with ease, and when in the meadows would frequently play and even gallop with some young colts that grazed along with him.

At that time there were no symptoms of an early dissolution. The great age of this horse would convince us that he had been kindly treated, and we naturally suppose he was never put to any violent work. Between the rounds of a wheel and on the banks of the Mersey, this animal seemed to have spent his life, doing such labor as would only amount to wholesome exercise. It is, therefore, these circumstances, kindness of treatment and moderation of labor which were the causes of his extreme longevity.

We would very much like to see this principle of moderation extended more generally to the horse at present. We know that all horses are not employed in a mill, nor can they be expected to do the slow labor of drawing a boat, which gives them and their driver a gait that once seen can never be forgotten, especially the driver, who never seems to be in a hurry. Still we feel convinced that too many horses are sacrificed in a shameful manner, which a very little consideration might prevent, and it is for this we wish to plead.—American Horse Breeder.

YACHTING ETIQUETTE.

Rules Governing the Conduct and Attention of Pleasure Boats.

The yachtsman called on me one day this week, and we talked boating.

"Etiquette of the yacht is as severe a code as I know," said he. "I have been a yachtsman for 25 years, and in rowing past a boat I can tell whether she is in charge of a yachtsman or a fisherman. A fisherman can sail your boat and keep her shipshape, but she will still look like a mackerelman.

"I remarked that there is no etiquette more rigid than the etiquette of yacht life. Any yachtsman can tell by the way a boat rounds to in a fleet and comes to anchor whether the skipper is to yacht's deck born or whether he has stubbed around in a coaster and drawn the lines over a fisherman. It is just the same as in a ballroom. You can tell the novice.

"Take the etiquette of flags. Of course the owner has his private signal, either square, swallow tail or triangular. Then he will have his club pennant and of course the regular yacht flag. Other flags are for decorative purposes.

"If he is cruising, he carries the yacht flag (an ensign with a foul anchor in blue in place of the stars) flying at the peak. If he is lying in port, he flies the yacht flag at the flagstaff above the boom on the taffrail, or if he has no flagstaff he has it on a leader to the topping lift. When the owner is aboard, the owner's signal is flying. When he is ashore, a blue flag should fly at the crosstrees on the starboard side. When he is at his meals, fly a white square flag in place of the blue. When the crew is at table, fly little triangular red flag on the port side. A schooner yacht always flies both the yacht club and private signals.

"Steamers come under the general rule of sailing craft so far as etiquette goes. We were passing Mr. Morgan's magnificent steam yacht, the Corsair, last season. I was directed to blow the whistle to salute.

"It was my plain duty to obey, although I knew it to be contrary to the rules of the New York Yacht club. The Corsair dipped her flag in reply. Mr. Vanderbilt was on board our boat, and he asked me why the Corsair did not answer the salute.

"'She did, sir,' said I. 'It is not a salute to blow a whistle. The only recognized salute is by the flag. It is not good yachting form to blow a whistle at another boat.'

"When we came in, we steamed alongside the Corsair, and Mr. Vanderbilt went aboard, presented his compliments and explanations.

"I know no life with more of romance and adventure, year in and year out, than the life of a yachtsman, and I have lived to see the schooner yacht practically displaced by the sloop and the English steamer with the size and appointments of a ship become the fashion of the very wealthy. I sailed years ago the sloop Coming, one of the biggest sloops in American waters—the marvel and the monster. How long do you suppose she was over all? Less than 80 feet."—Lewiston Journal.

How Diaz Painted Nature.

He has worked lovingly and searchingly over the remote woody haunt in which his figures stand, and now, with the coming of those enchanted and enchanting visitors, he lets his love of gorgeous hues spring out and have free play. Tube after tube he empties upon the palette, brush after brush is snatched up by his nimble fingers. Even then the color will not come swiftly enough, and the palette knife is called into service. The paint goes on in layers, and the silvery flash of the dryad which he paints grows warmer and firmer, the flowers in her hair grow brighter, the drapery flung from her shoulder takes in one bold, passionate stroke a quivering life of color into its texture, and the picture is complete, the record of an inspiration begun in meditative contemplation of a lovely scene and developed further and further until the fervor of the artist rises into a species of happy intoxication, and you get the ravishing art which makes Diaz a master.—Royal Cortissoz in Century.

OF FRIENDSHIP.

A winter's eve, dark, cold and comfortless!
My feelings catch the spirit of the night;
Nor can a cheerful fire's warmth and light
Dispel foreboding thoughts and restlessness.
'Tis at such times dread visions cross our sight,
Unwelcome phantoms, shadowlike, appear,
Supplant hope's prophecy with idle fear,
Create and mock our melancholy plight.
But, of a sudden, my good friend is here;
As mists before the sun these demons go,
What matter winter's cold and skies above—
My heart is full of happiness and cheer!
Such swift transitions they alone can know
Who drink soul deep of friendship and its love.
—Walter Francis Kenrick in Boston Journal.

A BEAUTIFUL MAN.

He had that insolent, aggressive sort of beauty that makes people turn around in the street and stare—the strong, fair, God given beauty that even men like to look at.

He lived up to his beauty, and for his beauty and by his beauty. He looked like a prince, a prince of some northern saga—like Frithjof, the destroyer of gods. He looked like the impossible hero of a penny novelette written by a woman.

He was one evening at Colonel and Mrs. Wayne's. The music was complicated, and the women were plain, and he—wishing these conditions had been reversed—sat with his elbow resting on a little table near him and hand lifted up, looking at his nails. It soothed him and prevented his yawning from becoming unmanageably frequent.

"May I see them, too?" said a woman's voice at his side. It was a clear young voice, and when he turned around to look at its owner he was disappointed.

"I am a painter," said she, "and understand beautiful hands." She held out one of her own, palm upward, as she spoke, waiting for him to lay his upon it. He did so smiling, not knowing exactly what to say, and she bent her head a little to one side and looked at it.

The daughters of the house were playing a long duet.

"How dreadfully bored you are," she said thoughtfully, without raising her eyes; "five yawns in ten minutes. You may take back your hand. Thank you."

He was again at a less what to say. He did not quite understand her, with her pretty voice and her ugly face. He would have liked to know what she thought of his hand, but it looked foolish to ask. So he sat still, staring at her aggravating, untidy little profile.

The ugly little thing came up to him before the evening was over and lifted her small hard face to his. "Mr. Van den Heuvel," she said in a pretty voice that ought to have belonged to some one else, "I want you to come and see me—that is," she corrected laughingly, "I want you to come and let me see you. I want to paint you, please." And here a softening of the pretty voice. "You are so very beautiful! I am an exceedingly clever painter, you know, so you need not fear to trust your beauty with me."

He went next day, and the day after that and every day.

She never heeded or cared about what his thoughts or his feelings might be. She painted on, stopping sometimes to clasp her hands in frank, heathenish adoration before him. "Your beauty positively hurts me!" she would say, pressing both her hands to her heart. And if he turned pale she told him to spoil her tints.

* * * * * *

"I love you," said Henri Pierre one afternoon as she bent over him with a cardboard lotus lily in her hand.

"Don't be foolish, dear," she said, rearranging her landscape.

"I love you," repeated Narcissus.

"Now your curls are all tangled up on the wrong side, and it will take me an hour to fasten the lilies on your head," she said crossly. And with light, turpentiny fingers and with a long brush in her mouth she patted him into shape again. "There, look down now and smile."

* * * * * *

"I shall try and catch smallpox," said Henri Pierre, opening his eyes, "or get burned in a fire and be all scarred and hideous. Then you will love me for something better than my beauty."

"Then I shall not love you at all," said the girl, with a decided little dab of the brush. "Go to sleep. Here comes Diana."

It was not Diana. It was Lydia Love, the poetess, who opened the door and entered with the flash and dazzle of her young success, and of her scarlet hat and cloak.

"My dear, you must lend him to me," she said after she had kissed her friend and stared at Henri Pierre until he shut his eyes again in self defense. "I have got an order for 24 sonnets, and my brain is absolutely dried up. Lend him to me for three weeks. I'll send him back unimpaired. Heavens! What a face he has!"

* * * * * *

He learned all her poems by heart, and recited them to her in the mornings when she was too calm to write. He sat at her feet from morning to night with the blue intensity of his eyes fixed on her willful face, and his heart broken by her capricious kindness.

"I love you," he said.

She laughed. "Be content with the gift of gifts the gods have blessed you with—your beauty—your improbable, your perfect, your magnificent beauty."

"Hang my beauty!" cried Henri Pierre passionately. "I want to be loved—loved for no reason—loved! Not because my nose is straight, and my hair browny yellow, and my eyes sky blue! But loved with closed eyes, blindly, unreasonably."

"I am sorry," said Lydia, who had finished her twenty-fourth sonnet that day; "but I cannot help you. And if you take my advice you will never be angry or in earnest about anything. It spoils your features."

* * * * * *

"Chi dice ca li stelle so 'lucente,
Nun sape st'uocchie ca tu tiene'nfronte."

It was not a boy, it was a young girl singing, and a little boy who was with her played the guitar. Henri Pierre threw them down a shilling. The little fellow immediately stopped playing to pick it up, but the girl went on singing in her shrill, young voice:

"Scetate, Carulì, ca l'aria è doce!"

Next day they came again.

"Chi dice ca li stelle so 'lucente,"

He threw up the window, and, sure enough, there they stood, the girl and the little boy.

Henri Pierre looked at the girl and then walked up to the large mirror that reached from the ceiling to the ground between two of the windows. He looked at himself closely and carefully for a long time, then he lifted his fist and crashed it down on the mirror so that the broken glass flew all around him.

Then he called his servant to bandage up his hand.

* * * * * *

"Yes, I have made up my mind," said the countess. "I am going to call on her. Of course I shall drop her again, but I want to see her. It is preposterous. The whole thing is preposterous."

And she rustled out of the room.

Henri Pierre's little Italian bride was sitting on the sofa when the Countess D'Arcy was announced. She arose when the visitor entered and held out her hand. Then she sat down again and waited.

"As an old friend of your husband I have wished to be the first to call and congratulate his bride," said the countess graciously.

"Do you know," said the countess, "that you have carried off the prize—the great prize of the season?"

The girl flushed warmly. "I know it, signora, I know it," she said, clasping her hands and speaking with an adorable Sicilian accent. "I have taken the prize! I have got the prince, the king that marries the girl in the story book. He is like San Giorgio, the slayer of dragons, or the Arcangelo Michele! He is the greatest, the noblest, the best, the cleverest!"

The countess smiled with indulgent pity.

"Yes, yes! He may be the greatest, the best, the cleverest, but what, my dear, is absolutely certain is that you have carried off the handsomest man in the country! Such beauty as his is not equaled once in a century."

The little street singer lifted her face, and her lids fluttered over her quiet eyes.

"Ah, that of course means nothing to me," she said. "I am blind."—London Sun.

The Queerest of Human Ailments.

If you will carefully read the statistics of the late war between the states you will find that according to the statements which have from time to time emanated from the adjutant general's office 199,720 Union troops died of disease during the years 1861–5. Of the 199,270 who succumbed to various maladies during those terrible years 21,187 died of a disease that was not classified simply because of its varying symptoms.

The majority of readers have never heard of this malady, but that it existed among the troops on both sides during the civil war—and in all other wars, for that matter—will not be denied by any observer who took the trouble to look a little beyond the havoc caused by shot and shell and the long catalogue of well, known and well marked diseases incident to warfare. We refer to the malady known as nostalgia, which is the medical term for "homesickness." When this queer disease seizes its victim with a strong grip, he is almost as sure to die as though his malady were cholera. Persons who die from nostalgia apparently die without cause for so doing, but they die just as dead as though their ailment had been characterized by the eruptions of smallpox or the black vomit of yellow fever.

Nostalgia is not strictly an American disease, but has been known in all countries ever since men first became able to distinguish between physical ailments and cases of literal pining and fretting one's life away. Bismarck once said that for every 100 deaths in the army 7 were due to nostalgia or homesickness.—St. Louis Republic.

The Effects of Heat.

In The Nuovo Cimento, Signor Pettinelli describes a new determination of the lowest temperature at which a hot body becomes visible. He heated a cast iron cylinder 30 centimeters long and 14 broad, in a wrought iron jacket over a Bunsen burner to a temperature of 460 degrees C., as indicated by an air thermometer, and then observed its flat end in a dark room from a point 60 centimeters above it. When it had cooled to about 415 degrees, the red heat vanished and gave way to an indefinite hazy glow, the latter completely disappearing at 404 degrees, and repeated observations giving an error of only 3 degrees. High emissive substances became visible at the same temperature, but reflecting surfaces had to be heated 20 degrees higher before they appeared to the eye, and glass still more. These low temperature rays were found to traverse glass and water like ordinary light rays, but suffering a comparatively greater absorption. Different eyes differ slightly in their capacity for seeing them, the maximum divergence being about 6 degrees.

Declined With Thanks.

The editor of the Hillsboro (Ills.) News thus declines in advance an impending nomination to congress: "The mission of the hireling who holds the plow handles of this paper is to keep the fires burning on the altars of liberty and beacon lights blazing on the shores of time at $1.50 a blaze, invariably in advance. He does not hunger and thirst after official life. He did think once he would like to go to the legislature, but he has grown in grace since then and purged his system of that unholy desire. Since then he has not yearned a single yearn or hankered a hank after political distinction."

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

FAITHFUL RUSTIC.

A Clever, Affectionate Doggie Who Always Found His Way Home.

I am going to tell you a story about my dog. I called him Rustic, after a celebrated fox hound. He was a fox terrier, and the brightest and sharpest little fellow you ever saw.

When I was about 10 years old, my mother married again, and my stepfather took a great dislike to Rustic because the dog showed plainly he did not like the new inmate in our house.

"I'll have that dog poisoned," said my stepfather one day when Rustic had refused to come to him when he was called.

Every day I used to hear him complain about my dear doggie, and one summer's morning things came to a climax. Rustic had killed a favorite cat of my father's, and the verdict went forth that the dog was to be poisoned, but my mother begged so hard that at last Mr. Jackson, my stepfather, agreed to let the dog live, but he was to be sent away.

Jim, our shepherd, took him to the next village and gave him to a friend. I cried myself to sleep that night, but was comforted by the thought that I could go and see him sometimes. At last I fell asleep, and to my intense surprise and joy the next morning I woke up and found Rustic by my side licking my hands. Oh, how glad I was, but it was of no use. My stepfather insisted on his going away again, and this time he was sent in the cart to the next county to a friend of ours.

I kissed my dear dog, and he was put into the cart and taken into Leicestershire, along a road that he had never been, to our knowledge. I had vague hopes that I should wake up to find him by me again the next morning, but this time I was disappointed.

All that day I was utterly wretched. The next day, just as we were beginning breakfast, I heard a bark, and there actually sitting on the doorstep was Rustic. He was dusty and panting, but was overjoyed at seeing me and licked my hands and face all over.

My father was annoyed and declared he would try once more, and this time the dog was to be tied in a sack and taken by train to London.

I thought now that I had lost him forever, as nothing was heard of him for about a week, when one morning, going out into the garden after breakfast, I discovered a poor starved dog lying just outside our gate. I called Tom, one of the gardeners, to come and carry him in, as my love for animals always made me kind to them. Tom stooped down, then started back.

"Why, I'm blessed if it ain't old Rustic come back."

"What!" I exclaimed. And indeed it was. The poor doggie had come all the way back from London.

This time we were able to prevail upon Mr. Jackson not to send him away again, and I think he really admired the dog for his wonderful sagacity in coming home through places he had never seen.

I always say Rustic was more like a person than a dog, and you can imagine how much I loved such a clever, faithful little fellow.

It was a great trouble to me when he died, and, although I have had more than one dog since then, I have never cared for any dog as I did for Rustic.

If I Were Ten.

If I were ten, my dear, like you,
The sky, methinks, were always blue;
The hours would ne'er seem dull and dun,
For every day I'd see the sun
Come out and gild the world anew.

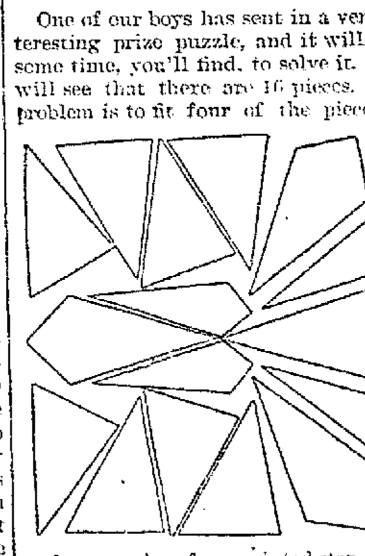

And everything I heard were true;
There were not aught to mourn, undo;
I scarce would know the things to shun
If I were ten.

And yet perhaps if I could woo
Your age again I'd long with rue
To see the years and birthdays run
Until my place today were won.
I'd have a different point of view
If I were ten.

A Hard Nut to Crack.

One of our boys has sent in a very interesting prize puzzle, and it will take some time, you'll find, to solve it. You will see that there are 16 pieces. The problem is to fit four of the pieces together to make a four pointed star. Then add eight pieces and make a perfect Maltese cross, and the last four pieces, when added, will make a perfect square. Who'll be the first to solve the puzzle?—Chicago Record.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

IN the stroke of six ends the day's work at stores, offices, factories, mills, where women are employed. But their necessary work at home, sewing, mending, etc., must be done after that time, and "their work is never done."

All women work; some for ambition, some for economy in the household, but the great mass of women work for their daily bread. All are subject to the same physical laws; all suffer alike from the same physical disturbances, and the nature of their duties often quickly drifts them into the horrors of all kinds of female complaints, ovarian troubles, inflammation, ulceration, falling and displacement of the womb, leucorrhœa, and perhaps irregular or suppressed "monthly periods," causing severe backache, loss of appetite, nervousness, irritability and weakness.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the unfailing cure for all these troubles. It strengthens the proper muscles, and cures displacement.

Backache, dizziness, fainting, bearing-down, disordered stomach, moodiness, dislike of friends and society—all symptoms of the one cause—will be quickly dispelled. Write Mrs. Pinkham about your trouble.

You can tell the story of your pain to a woman, and get the help that only woman can give. Mrs. Pinkham's address is Lynn, Mass.

A NEW CEMETERY.

Bishop Hortsman Purchases the Dobbins Farm.

The Ground Lies Adjacent to Woodlawn, and Will be Converted Into a Beautiful Burial Ground.

The Catholic church of this city, Saturday afternoon at 4 o'clock, purchased the Dobbins farm, which joins Woodlawn cemetery on the west, and will convert the farm into one of the most beautiful burial grounds to be found in this part of the State.

The farm consists of sixty-four acres, and is a most desirable location for a resting places for the dead. It will all be used for a cemetery with the exception of the low ground, consisting of twenty-four acres, which will be offered for sale. For over a week the church has had an option on this real estate, and Saturday Rev. Father Manning, as agent for Bishop Hortsman, of Cleveland, purchased the land, agreeing to pay $100 an acre for it.

The board of directors will be selected at once, and work will be begun on the grounds in the near future.

The present Catholic cemetery is becoming very much crowded, and more room is needed. After the new cemetery is laid out, Lima will have two as beautiful burial grounds as any city could desire.

The transfer was made this morning in the law office of Motter & Mackenzie, one half of the price being paid in cash, the remainder being made payable in two and three years.

Choice corner Lot given away to-morrow (Tuesday) afternoon at 1 o'clock sharp. No ticket good unless the holder is on the ground. Free tickets and plats at Folsom's.

SOCIAL SALVATION.

What Must Society Do to be Saved?

ANSWERED BY B. FAY MILLS

Our Social Sickness Diagnosed and the Remedy Suggested—The Meetings Increasing in Attendance—House Crowded Last Night.

As previously announced, owing to the immense crowds that were certain to be in attendance last night, Mr. Mills requested that his congregation should consist entirely of men and that they should be admitted by ticket. At 7:30, the hour for commencement, the room was crowded. Soon every seat on the platform was taken and seats were placed in the aisles. It was the largest meeting of the series thus far. It was a magnificent opportunity for any speaker, but especially for the evangelist who came preaching social regeneration by an enlightening of the social conscience.

And such singing! The choir was in its place, but how those thousand men sang! Mr. Hillis sang "Throw Out the Life Line," the audience joining in the chorus. Rev. Swanson led in prayer. Mr. Mills then read the first chapter of Isaiah, remarking as he began that it was a description of society in the days of Isaiah. Mr. Hillis then sang "Christ Marches Onward—Mighty to Save."

Mr. Mills announced that he would preach upon "The Family and the Kingdom." On Tuesday evening he would speak upon "How to do Business in the Kingdom of God."

"The text," said he, "is an old friend with a new application." Acts 16:31—"Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and Thou Shalt be Saved."

"There is only one way for an individual to be saved, and that is to become unselfish. There is only one way for the family to be saved, and that is by the spirit of unselfishness prevailing among the members in their intercourse one with another. There is only one way for the city to be saved; only one way for the nation to be saved; only one way for humanity to be saved—that is by the spirit of unselfishness prevailing among all. This is what is meant by believing on the Lord Jesus Christ.

"Of late years the individual has been exalted at the expense of the associated individuals. The American and French revolutions were based upon the idea of individual rights, and the rights of man was the whole trend of the philosophy of that day. The present century has been blest with the development of the idea of association. Man does not live as an individual but as a member of society. Mazzini says that man exists for the good of humanity.

"The great unrest of society is evidence that it is convicted of sin. In the past as society became convicted of sin, it threw off slavery, then polygamy. Now we are noticing other wrongs or sins from which we must turn. So long as society stands and says, 'O Lord, we thank thee that we are better than other worlds," or "better than we used to be," so long it will remain unforgiven. But if it awakes to its sins, and stands stands and cries, "O God be merciful to me, a sinner," it is on a fair way to be saved. As a man in a dark prison sees more and more of the slimy things that crawl about him as the light enters, so we need to have a more sensitive conscience.

"Society is being convicted of (1) a form of political freedom that denies the power there; (2) of the exaltation of property above humanity; (3) of a profession of egality of opportunity for men, of which there is little value save the profession; (4) ecclesiastical selfishness.

"Let us look at the disease in its three aspects—the symptoms, the disease, the remedy; and first, the symptoms.

"First is the governing of the law making power by selfish financial interests. The fact that you can hear this and not groan is a confession that society is not yet awake to her duty. The president of the sugar trust confessed before a senatorial committee that the trust had put $250,000 in certain states to elect senators of one party who would favor the plans of the trust and a like amount in other states to elect men of the other party, in order that whichever way the battle went the trust would be safe. If we heard that about ancient Rome we would shudder with horror.

"Second, society is convicted of the greed and struggle for public office for purely personal objects and the selection of unworthy men to office.

"Presidential candidates talk openly about their campaigns for the office, as if it was merely an object of personal gain. They strive for this great office for selfish ends.

"No man who would lift his little finger to be made president is worthy to be made president.

"In that high office we need to realize that the greatest call is the call to holy service of the people. The president of the United States should be the holiest man in the United States, and no man who would go into a scramble for it ought to have it.

"Third, society is convicted of permitting the existence of a frivolous, idle class of wealthy people with increasingly lower moral ideas and practices, who assume to be models for polite people in social intercourse.

"Fourth, society is convicted of the unprecedented accumulation of money and land and natural monopolies in the hands of a few men, by unholy methods.

"Fifth, society is convicted of bringing about commercial crises and ensuing panics, caused by what is commonly called over-production.

"Sixth, society is convicted of the combination of masses of men who have been wronged by the unholy use of capital, for the purpose of destructive remedy.

"Seventh, society is convicted of the absorption of the church in herself, instead of being the inspiration that should lead to the regeneration of society.

"A wrong conception of the gospel hinders the kingdom of God. An architect or builder exists to make himself unnecessary; so also a physician. Christ came not to be ministered unto, but to minister unto men. But many a time the church sits back like a sick child and says, 'I am the one Christ came to save, and exist that He may minister unto me.' That is the demonology of hell. God never called the church except for service. He did not send His Son to save the church for its own sake, but to save the church for the sake of the world that she might do the works of the Master.

"There are signs of life in this direction. The church is waking up. God keep us from setting in our soft pews and singing, 'We, we are saved,' and struggling to save our souls for bliss in some distant Eden.

"The disease is selfishness, and it is the only thing that needs to be abolished. The solution must be a religious solution. We must give our time and money and energy to eradicate selfishness from the world. The business man, the philosopher, the scientist, who does not want to eradicate selfishness is an enemy to his race. We must have either revolution or revival until every man is brought into a relationship of divine brotherhood with every other man.

"The remedy, the cure, is the text Believe in Christ as the remedy of God, as the standard of judgment, as the inspiration of love and hope.

"Believe in Christ's teachings as the only guide to unselfishness. No world is a hopeless world where one divinely unselfish man could live.

"There is only one answer to the question 'What is to be done?' That is 'What would Jesus do?' What a loving thing that is to do; what an easy thing. Christianity does not affect to regulate the state and the affairs of business, but to supply the spirit for their regulation. Let the motto be not 'All thine is mine,' but 'All mine is thine.'

"'Each for all and all for each,' in the spirit and love of Christ: this is the realization of His kingdom on earth."

CYCLING.

Good Races Mark the Opening of the L. C. C. Track.

FREE RACES WEDNESDAY.

Frank Plaice Defeated by Earl Bressler in a Half Mile Open—Smith Reed Wins a Novice—Cycling News of General Interest.

Considering the unfavorable weather and the many other attractions on Memorial day, a very good crowd of spectators witnessed the opening of the L. C. C. track. Five events were on the programme, but the last two races were not run on account of the rain that began falling. The feature of the afternoon was the phenomenal sprinting of Earl Bressler, who defeated Frank Plaice by nearly half a wheel length in a half mile open, and defeated a whole field of good riders in a one mile handicap. On account of the last two races on Saturday's programme being postponed, no admission fee will be charged at the gate next Wednesday evening.

* * *

The first event Saturday evening was a one mile novice in which there were 6 starters. O L. Hadsell dropped out on the first lap on account of a loose wheel. Smith Reed ran several lengths ahead of the other riders on the second lap and finished first with ease. Orla Clutter finished second, and C. W. Preble third. Time 2:35 2-5.

* * *

The second event was a half-mile open, paced. The contestants were Frank Plaice, Earl Bressler, F. M. Keeton, Guy Folk and Jas. Sanders. The race was fast from the start and those who were quick enough to catch the pace at the start had an advantage. At the home stretch it was a close contest between Bressler and Place, and the former won only by a few inches. In justice to Plaice it may be said that he has had but little training. Bressler's performance was very creditable, and he was applauded by the spectators. Sanders finished third. Time, 1:06 2-5.

* * *

Event 3 was the most exciting race of the afternoon. It was a one-mile handicap, in which eleven riders started. Keeton was the only scratch starter and the nearest man to him was at the 75-yard mark. His start was a feature of the race. He picked up the entire bunch before the first lap was half covered. The finish was exciting, and Earl Bressler again displayed his ability as a racer. He started from the 75-yard mark and finished first; Orla Clutter, 125 yards, second; Guy Folk, 100 yards, third. Time, 2:26 2-5.

* * *

As was recently stated in the TIMES-DEMOCRAT, the board of trustees of the L. C. C. has decided to keep a record of the races during the entire season, beginning next Wednesday evening, and at the end award some handsome medals to the riders having the most points to their credit. A first will count 4 points, a second 3, a third 2, and a fourth 1 point, and in order to give the riders an equal chance for the prizes, the racing board has divided them into three classes.

* * *

Class 1 will be composed of the fastest men, who, in the judgment of the racing board, are F. M. Keeton, Clyde Roberts, Geo. Woods, F. H. Plaice, Earl Bressler, Bruce Yingling, John Hughes, Henry Hanenstein and Fred Burgoyne. Should a rider in this class be unable to win any points he may make application to be transferred into the next slower class.

* * *

Class 2 consists of the middle class, who are considered too slow to compete with the fastest men and too fast for the slowest men. To this class the following riders have been assigned: Guy Folk, Ed Reel, James Sanders, Smith Reed, Henry Betts, O. E. Clutter, Alva Brown and H. A. White. Should a rider in this class be deemed too fast he will be advanced to class 1.

* * *

Class 3 is composed of novices and the slower riders. Those who have been assigned to it are C. E. Hurst, C. W. Preble, Herbert Walker, Ira Stewart, Clarence Reel, Chas. Rowlands, O. L. Hadsell, H. Graham, Frank Wilhelm, Chas. Hover, H. Nichols and Harmon Herald. These riders will also be advanced according to their winnings.

* * *

Four races will be given each Wednesday evening—one race for each of the three classes and one handicap race in which all may compete. The program for next Wednesday evening will consist of a half mile, open for class 1; a mile, open for class 2; a half mile, open for class 3, and a two-mile handicap for all. Entries are already in and programs will be furnished spectators.

* * *

There were 843 entries for the great 24-mile road race at Chicago Saturday and 506 riders started. The winner was O. P. Nelson, a member of the Monitor club of Chicago, and a "dark horse." The first time prize was won by F. B. Murphy, another Chicago man who rode the course in 1:09:22.

Tuesday, June 2nd, at 1 o'clock, that elegant Parlor Suite in Neuman & William's show window, also a choice Corner Lot, will be given away at the great auction sale of Lots in Seinsheimer's Clifton addition. Call on C. H. Folsom for tickets and plats. 1t
